Alexandria Gazette

MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 25.

The Late Judge Guigon.

The late Judge Guigon, of the Hastings Court of Richmond, was born in that city in 1831. His father was a French dancing master. At one time he was a page in the United States Senate. To great extent the Judge was the architect of his own fortune. He never had the advantage of a collegiate training. He went upon the bench in May, 1870. The Richmond Dispatch says:—

With the people generally Judge Guigon was popular. In court he laid down his rules and required that they should be observed. He permitted no familiarities there. It mattered not whether it was lawyer, juror, witness, or spectator who disobeyed, he was promptly rebuked, and if the enormity of the offence justified it, he was punished by fine.

But this stern and resolute judge was, when among his friends, one of the most sociable and agreeable of men. He was an entertaining conversationalist. He delighted in field sports, and was thoroughly familiar with the habits, business, pleasures, and wants of the people in whose midst he dwelt, and with whom he had a life long identity. Richmond he loved dearly, and in many of the reforms he instituted he had to contend with prejudices and with decided disapproval from some. But he was absolutely independent of such influence. He was self-reliant and determined. Believing himself right, it did not trouble him to know what others thought. His moral courage was superb. There was no hesitation in him about taking action because it might not meet with the favor of others. His decision of character made him a great favorite. There is no claim that he never made mistakes. Probably he made plenty, but his course was guided by discretion, desire to do the right, and to execute the laws; and more so than could be.

In the very beginning of his judicial career he was called upon to decide the "Jefferson-Ward ballot-box smashing case," as it was popularly called. In the face of a strong and loudly expressed public opinion he decided against his own party and ordered a new election. There was much murmuring of discontent for awhile, but the gentlemen most immediately affected saw that he was doing what he thought right. They honored him for it and gloried in his spunk, and all of them were afterwards, as before, counted as among his best friends.

By requiring promptness in all who attended his court, by refusing to listen to trivial excuses of witnesses and jurors, by declining to continue causes from one term to another except for most weighty reasons, he did an almost incredible amount of business. Last year was not an busy one as usual for him, but the record shows that the number of criminal cases tried and disposed of was 51.

For many years to come members of the Richmond bar will delight to tell anecdotes of Judge Guigon illustrating his firmness and consistent disposition.

He never attempted to conceal his thoughts. "He hadn't that sort of policy. Once when a jury brought in a verdict which he regarded as absurd he said to the Sergeant, 'Discharge that jury, and never summon them here again.'"

But, on the other hand, no judge delighted in or appreciated more attentive, intelligent, and thoughtful jurors, and he was ever disposed to be kindly regardful of their comfort. "Professional jurors" he did not like. Generally those who occupied the box there were among the best of our citizens.

The Judge put the curb upon some of our mettlesome lawyers by fining them for unbecoming language. A port witness, who told a smutty joke to illustrate what he considered the drunken condition of a man, had an attentive listener in the Judge, who, upon the witness' conclusion, quietly remarked: "Mr. Clerk, enter a fine against the witness for $25." It was done, and the fine had to be paid.

But of recent years the bar and the people had learned the Judge's rules, and they cheerfully obeyed them.
